THE AGITATION IN IRELAND.

LONDON, Nov. 8. Increased agitation has been aroused in Ireland, owing to the steps taken by the Government to bring the leaders of the Land League to trial. Meetings were yesterday about to be held in many parts of the country to protest against the proceedings which are about to be instituted, and many signs of agitation are persistently maintained.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 7.

Dervish Pasha has now brought the Conference with the Chiefs of the Albanian League to a close, and has entirely failed to induce them peaceably to comply with the advice tendered to them. In reply they have unanimously declared that, rather than yield, they will defend with their lives Dulcigno and other portions of Albanian territory ceded to Montenegro.

After the close of the conference with the Albanian chiefs, Dervish Pasha gave orders for the Nizams, or regular troops brought from Constantinople, to land. On reaching Dulcigno, however, they were prevented from entering the town, and are now encamped within a short distance of the place.

RECENT ATTEMPTS ON THE LIFE OF THE CAZAR.

ST. PETERSBURG, MONDAY.

During the past few months several attempts of persons believed to be implicated in the explosion at the Winter Palace, and the attempt to wreck a train near Moscow, have been made, and the trial of the accused commenced to-day.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

FARRAMATTA.

MONDAY.

Should the weather prove fine, the Farramatta race tomorrow are expected to be a great success. The Jockey Club have fixed a meeting for Boxing Day. The daughter of Mr. Richards, a squatter, was run over by a cart to-day, and her legs much lacerated, but no bones were broken.

We had several thunderstorms to-day, with much rain. It is still raining, but the weather has broken.

GRAFTON.

MONDAY.

Mr. J. S. Farnell was entertained at a banquet in Ramsay's Crown Hotel to-night; the Mayor in the chair. About sixty persons were present.

NEWCASTLE.

MONDAY.

On Saturday afternoon a miner named Henry Short had one of his legs broken, by a fall of coal at Sharp's Gully.

The Wolland and Co-operative miners had another meeting on Saturday evening, when it was decided to call a general meeting of the miners as soon as possible, to consider the question of payment of back money and other matters.

COPELAND NORTH.

MONDAY.

The Mechanics' Prospectors have completed crushing at the Prince Charles machine. About 80 tons yielded 147 oz.

TENTERFIELD.

MONDAY.

A burglary was committed here last night at Mr. C. A. Lee's Chesapeake Store. The robbers first attempted to take one of the shutters down, but not succeeding managed to wrench off a large padlock from the door. No much property was taken, the object being evidently to get cash, as the drawers were ransacked. The robbers are supposed to have been disturbed, as one of the lamps was found lighted this morning. An attempt was also made on the premises of C. Jensen, watchmaker, but did not succeed.

A boy named Hutton, while training a horse for Mr. Jolink, had his thigh broken on Saturday, by the horse bolting, and running him against a tree.

The district is now suffering much for want of rain. The grass is very bad, and the crops and fruit will be much injured.

Winning and shearing operations are impeded for want of water.

It is rumored that the police are on the track of the parties who set fire to the Tenterfield station warehouse, but nothing definite is known.

TAMWORTH.

MONDAY.

To-day has been very stormy. First we had a good shower of rain, and then heavy rain with hail, finishing between one and two with an exceedingly heavy storm, the wind being terrific and copious rain falling. A good deal of damage was done. Part of the roof of Cohen and Levy's Agricultural Implement Depot was torn down, and portion of the roof of the goods shed at the railway station blown off. Several roofs of the back premises of some residences were also blown off, and in some instances were carried over the houses and across the street. A tree was blown down at the residence of Mr. P. G. King (the Mayor), falling partly on the house and partly on the kitchen. The weather has been excessively hot lately. It was fine all the afternoon, and now looks settled.

ARBUCKLE.

MONDAY.

A fire occurred about 11 o'clock on Saturday night at A. J. Cavanagh's millinery and dressmaker's shop. The stock and fixtures were nearly all destroyed, but the building escaped with very little damage. The stock is insured for £500 in the Intercolonial and National and New Zealand offices, and the building in the Norwich Union. An inquiry was held to-day, as no one lived on the premises there was no evidence to show how the fire originated, and a verdict was returned accordingly.

Heavy rains have fallen to-day.

LITHGOW.

MONDAY.

On Saturday afternoon a serious accident happened to a girl named Perkins. She fell from a spring cart, and the wheel passed over the side of her face, crushing her ear, and inflicting other serious injuries.

A man named David Kelly, residing at Marsden's Swamp, was thrown from a buckjumper, and broke his arm.

WELLINGTON.

MONDAY.

Two hundred and twenty-four bales of Tarnale wool arrived to-day, consigned to Wright, Hutton, and Co. It is the first wool seen for years from the country west of the Darling. There are 1800 bales more of the same clip now on the road.

MUDGE.

MONDAY.

Another death from poison occurred to-day. A man named Frank Miller, who has resided for several years at Hill End, and has only been a week in Mudge, was found in his bedroom at noon to-day at the Club House Hotel. The deceased had purchased some prussic acid from a local chemist a few days previously, saying he wanted it for relieving irritation of the stomach, and also that he possessed a knowledge of medicine. The bottle that contained this acid was found under his hand, most of the acid being spilled. At the inquest, held this afternoon, the jury returned a verdict that the deceased had died from a dose of prussic acid, self-administered. It was stated that he was a native of Germany, and an educated man, and to have been present in Mudge in connection with electioneering matters.

TEMORA.

MONDAY.

A man was stabbed on Saturday night, in a drunken row with some larkins, at Lower Temora, where the bad elements of the gold-field mostly congregate. First-class detective John Joyland died on Saturday unexpectedly, and was buried yesterday. Mr. A. G. Neale, J.P., read the burial service, and a large number of people attended.

conditions and operating forces can be shown to be elements in the comparison. The decay of the older Powers took place under circumstances differing widely from those which now exist; and although it is a common saying that history repeats itself the proverb is only partially true. Human nature remains the same, but it is continually working out the problems before it by means of new combinations, and under new influences. Let the experiment of a federal Empire be tried in the case of Great Britain and her dependencies, and we should have a state of things for which no precedent could be found since the world began. What right have we to infer from the fact that empires without federation have fallen to pieces that the same course? It is at least conceivable that the very element of federation may be, not the bond of union to hold the Empire together, but a means of infusing from time to time new blood and new life into the central Government, and of establishing a continuous process of rejuvenescence which would prevent the repetition of the old round of maturity, senility, and decay.

The force of the argument as to population depends almost entirely upon the form which the Imperial federation might take. Fifty millions of Americans might possibly have been governed from Westminster at this day if they had been left to exercise full powers of self-government so far as matters of local interest were concerned, and had been governed from Westminster only in matters of Imperial import by a legislature in which their voice was heard and their influence was felt. It is not conceivable that the union between Great Britain and all her American colonies might have continued to this day had the relations between them been such as now exist between the mother colony and the Australian dependencies, or between Great Britain and the dependencies in America that still remain attached. Fifty millions of people of British descent could not be governed from Westminster like fifty millions of Hindoos, or a "Crown colony of the severe type;" it is in begging the question to assume that there is no form of government from a central point to which more than fifty millions would be willing to submit, if it left free scope for local action, and dealt only with great matters of common interest, in the treatment of which united action would mean general benefit and increased strength.

Sir ARCHIBALD MICHIE objects to the proposal made by Mr. WESTON and the Duke of MONTAGUE, that the colonies should be represented in the House of Commons. He says that in that case we should be bound by all that the House of Commons might do; "every misadventure of the mother country, with any and every power on earth, would become ours, whether we approved of it or not," and our share of the result would be a contribution to the cost. The idea of Imperial federation could hardly be carried into effect by the mere admission of colonial representatives into the House of Commons, whilst that body retained and exercised all its present functions unchanged. But, if we do not like being bound by the action of the Imperial Government, it is not enough to hold aloof from the establishment of any federal system; we must quit the Empire of which we now form a part. We are bound as it is, and cannot escape the consequences. There are only three courses for us to choose from—to go out of the Empire, and so escape responsibility for Imperial misadventure, at the cost of accepting the sole responsibility for any of our own; to remain as we are—that is, bear the risks, without having the right of a vote in the Imperial Council; or, to enter into some new arrangement under which we should acquire some influence in the disposal of Imperial affairs, however small it might be, in return for a certain contribution towards the expenditure for Imperial purposes.

It should not be forgotten that, whilst we are bound by the action of the Imperial authorities, we participate in the advantage as well as the risk that may arise out of it. If we "cut the painter," we should lose the advantages of Imperial action; but we should incur risks of our own, and if these led to disputes and hostilities the consequences would have to be borne by ourselves. Nor should we, as neutrals, avoid embarrassment or danger in the event of British misadventures with other Powers developing a maritime war. Great Britain is now bound by us, and bound to defend us with "her last ship and her last shilling." If we formed a community of fifty millions, we should have less occasion to consider the importance of protection of this sort; but some time must pass before that point is reached, and in the meantime it is at least worth considering whether there is not a balance of advantage in being part of a powerful Empire, which, if it would bring us into peril, will stand by us till it is past, instead of becoming separate petty States, and having either to submit to the first great Power that chose to bully us, or to be annexed by it. The question that underlies the project of Imperial federation, is whether the advantages which we derive from Imperial protection ought or ought not to be provided without any contribution from our side towards the cost. If it were true that the only result to us would be the payment of a contribution towards the cost, that very fact would carry with it the admission that at present we are getting benefit at the cost of the British taxpayers. As a matter of simple equity we ought to contribute; and a federal arrangement of some kind would seem to offer the best solution for the problem—how to supply the contribution and obtain some share of control over the disposal of the money. But the payment of a contribution would not be the only result. Co-operation in this matter would promote economy of resources, an increased efficiency, and diminish at the same time the chance of danger.

The great question that has been agitating the United States during the recent electoral period is whether the Republican or the Democratic party should have the upper hand, and the issue of the strife is that the former still holds the sway, and even holds it more firmly than it did four years ago. It has not won absolutely all along the line; for though it has gained a substantial majority in the House of Representatives it has a small minority in the Senate. But it has elected its candidate in the White House.

Prior to the civil war, the Democrats had enjoyed a long lease of power. But they reversed the election of Lincoln, and in revenge rushed into secession. Had they had patience, they might perhaps have recovered power, but they preferred to appeal to the sword. That appeal they lost, and since the return of peace they have been trying to regain the ballot-box what they lost on the battlefield. At the last Presidential election they very nearly succeeded. TIMEX and HAYES ran what was practically a dead heat. The Democrats say that TIMEX really won. Perhaps he did. But there was so much cheating on both sides that it is impossible to say. The convention that was appointed to settle the matter gave the seat to HAYES; and this decision, though repeatedly called in question, was never reversed. The present election has not left the matter in any doubt, and the Republican candidate has won by a substantial majority. Compared with four years ago, therefore, the Republican party has gained ground. The cause of this it may be difficult entirely to explain, and probably there were several causes; but the dominant feeling is, doubtless, the determination that the fruits of the war shall not be lost, and that the Southern party shall not again dominate at Washington. It will be some time before this feeling dies out, for there is abundant proof that the South, though conquered, is not reconciled. Nobody likes being conquered, and it usually takes several generations before a victory can be forgiven. Conquers that are won by the sword are always more or less costly possessions, as many an Imperial country has found. Republics have to go through that experience as well as monarchies. The Northern party is willing enough to let bygones be bygones, but the South will be content to fall into line and be united in feeling as before. But the bitter grudge remains in the South, and will not be so toned by the recent crushing defeat at the polls. Meanwhile the North is clearly the stronger power, and can afford to keep its rival down.

The party having gained, the person who represents the party is of minor importance. In this instance, as in so many others, a man comparatively in the background was at the moment brought to the front. The Blaines, the Sherburnes, the Conklings were all pushed aside. Able men who have been in front of the party for many years must of necessity have many enemies; but to carry an election, it is necessary to divide the party as little as possible, and it is for this reason that second-class men have so often been selected at the last and critical moment. From a sketch of his life that was given in our columns a few days ago, it will be seen that though GARFIELD may not boast the talents of some of the men who by his election have been disappointed, he is a man of resolution and capacity, and has worked his way up from obscurity and poverty, achieving his education by great personal effort and self-denial. That he is a self-made man has, no doubt, been in his favour, because it gratifies the working classes to put one of their number in the highest post of the State. GARFIELD owes nothing to early advantages in life; and it is worth noting in these days of primary schools that the new President of the United States could not read till he was sixteen years old. This is not an argument in favour of postponing this accomplishment till that age, but it goes to show that book-learning is not the whole of education, and that those who are something in themselves can do with very little teaching.

One of the new candidates for the Assembly has arrived at the conclusion that the land law is a fairly satisfactory state, when the magnitude of the interests involved is considered. No one will dispute the magnitude of the interests involved; but seeing that the effect of the law, as it stands, is to lock up capital unproductively, and to check beneficial improvement; to cause disputes, litigation, and disappointment; to promote idleness, lower the moral standard of the community, and corrupt the atmosphere of politics, the man who is "fairly satisfied" with the law must enjoy great digestion. Would the abatement of these evils bring about the check upon the waste of land? It is not accounting for the original Land Act would in this candidate's view be disadvantageous to agricultural settlement; he holds that, although the squatters had some reason to fear for their holdings four years ago, when free selection was first allowed, they have since then been driven in panic to purchase enormous areas, such a time is not likely to recur, the land man, he considers, is virtually at an end, and settlement will henceforth go on gradually. In what previously unexplored fields did our new prophet discover this new gospel? It may be safe to say that he has not. The land man was checked by gradually throughout the whole course of the land mania. But settlement and free selection are not convertible terms. It was not settlement that drove the squatters into a panic, nor does the cause of settlement require that the principle of the Land Act should be preserved intact. The land mania was checked by tightening of the money market and an increase on the upset price at auction sales; but let easier times come, and the upset fall back to £1 an acre, and the mania will break out again, if all the leasehold Crown land is still held subject to indiscriminate free selection. The last reason for the panic was the free selection going on morrily, and that auction purchase is reviving. The squatters still feel afraid. When free selection was first extended to the pastoral districts there were people who said "there is nothing for the squatters to fear;" but the squatters found there was much, and soon learned to defend themselves, and they will defend themselves still, if their interests are still left open to invasion. The "land mania" will last and show itself in one form or another so long as free selection is allowed to tickle the soles of the pastoral lessees and to drive them to do what they would not think of doing under a rational system.

Mr. BERRY, in the course of the explanation he afforded the Victorian Assembly respecting his action in connection with thrusting his sons into positions in the Civil service, is reported to have made some very remarkable statements. He stated that he could not apply for employment for his sons to the banks, not to the merchants, nor to the large landowners, because all these classes are politically opposed to him. It would be too much for the Victorian Premier to put that statement in the sense that motives of delicacy had restrained him from attempting to procure situations for his sons in the quarters mentioned. Delicacy or sensitiveness is not regarded as Mr. BERRY's strong point. The presumption, therefore, is that he meant to convey that he had tried to find openings for his boys in these directions, and had been rebuffed. We venture to question the probability of such occurrences. Political animosities can scarcely run so universally high among the business people of Victoria that the sons of the father are visited upon the sons to the ridiculous extent of refusing to competent youths employment in all banks, all commercial establishments, all considerable estates. But even granting the cogency of the excuse, it is really wonderful that Mr. BERRY, of all men, ventured to offer it. It involved inflicting most damaging to a politician whose chief claim upon the popular suffrages has always been that he is a man of the people, and free from the blamable of aristocratic proclivities. In effect Mr. BERRY conveyed to his hearers that, falling position in a bank, a merchant's office, or on a large property, no avocation remained suitable for the attention of a youthful BERRY except the Civil service. The democratic leader affects the genteel for his offspring. Another conclusion to which his apology pointed is no less awkward. All the institutions which Mr. BERRY had mentioned as closed against his aspirations for his sons are of the free-trade political-economic school, consequently, that in the opinion of the leader of the protectionist party in Victoria there does not exist, after all the years that protection has been given to native industries in that colony, a single establishment of sufficient importance and value to afford employment for the sons of the protectionist apostle. We had thought that one of the most strongly urged benefits which protection was to confer was employment for the rising generation. Yet it would now appear that even Mr. BERRY finds native industry so hollow a thing that he is under the necessity of going in hand to free traders—his political opponents in a suit to solicit for his boys that employment which he would surely have gladly accepted for his political friends had they any to offer, and that, rebuffed by the former, no resource remained but to thrust his sons into the Civil service. Truly, if any weight is to be allowed to Mr. BERRY's explanation, Victoria is under a painful stain. For the rising generation there is nothing to do. There is no soil to till, no productive industry to be followed, nothing to develop. Representative democrats regard useful toil as not genteel, and even disregard custom and law in their feverish anxiety to thrust their sons into the overmanned and unprofitable ranks of the Civil service.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

DERVISH PASHA has failed to bring about a peaceable settlement of the difficulty regarding the cession of Dulcigno to Montenegro. The Albanian chiefs declare their determination to defend their country with their lives rather than yield to the demands which the European Powers have made upon them. Consequently Dervish Pasha has landed his troops, and they are now camped near Dulcigno. For the rising generation there is nothing to do. There is no soil to till, no productive industry to be followed, nothing to develop. Representative democrats regard useful toil as not genteel, and even disregard custom and law in their feverish anxiety to thrust their sons into the overmanned and unprofitable ranks of the Civil service.

On Sunday last, as Miss Cissy Green, daughter of Mr. R. A. Green, of Ward, estate Lane, was returning home from church, she courageously attacked and killed a death adder, which was crawling over her path. The venomous reptile was about 30 inches in length, and of the species known as Acanthopsis canaliculata.

A rough-and-ready village, where there is a good deal of blacksmithing, the Herald has a good enough to make known the grievance; but I never see much published about the inconveniences to which residents in the railway suburbs are subjected, from which it must be inferred that said residents are an uncompensated class. This morning I arrived at the Belconnen terminus in company with about 50 others, many of them ladies. The weather was fair a few miles out of town, but we began to run into the rain about Newtown, and at Belconnen it was pouring down in torrents. There were two train-motors and four "cars" stuck up at the entrance to the railway yard, as I understand, one of the vehicles being off the line. Being under shelter, the waiting passengers were able to put their feet up, and to make a few remarks about the rain, but we began to run into the rain about Newtown, and at Belconnen it was pouring down in torrents.
